As reported here, the issue that has been virtually resolved in moving toward a new strategic arms limitation agreement centers on previous Soviet attempts to restrict in a new agreement the ability of Western European countries to de-

Communications Seized

The reports said while the airmen in Soviet-made MiG-21s flew over the city, soldiers battled their way into the Interior Ministry headquarters and also took control of the central post and telegraph office, the center of Afghanistan's civilian communications.

The heaviest fighting took place in and around the presidential pal-ace, the Interior Ministry and Pushtunistan Square, in the heart of Ka-bul and the location of many tourist hotels.

Diplomats said the U.S. Embassy in Kabul reported no U.S. citizens injured. Reports said numerous bodies were seen in areas of heavy fighting but that the number dead was not immediately known. French officials said their embassy compound was hit by two tank rounds and the consulate, inside the compound, was destroyed.

Tank Fighting

Chin Shih Huang gained notoriety for using vast amounts of conscript labor to build much of the Great Wall and having the Confucian classics burned because they con-flicted with his own more utilitarian philosophy of statecraft known as legalism.

An article this week in Jen Min Jih Pao, utled "On Deification," asserted that when the radicals controlled China's communications industries, "historical personages were either deified or described as ghosts. The good were absolutely good and were eulogized in every way, while the bad were absolutely bad and were vilified with the most vicious language."

The radicals, or the "Gang of Four," the article added, often drew on the famous 20th-century Chinese writer Lu Hsun to deify Chin Shih Huang, but conveniently neglected to mention that Lu Hsun had also criticized the emperor. Thus, the article noted, Lu Hsun had praised Chin Shih Huang's burning of the books "for the purpose of unifying thinking," but had also pointed out that it was "an obscurantist policy.

A proper interpretation of Chin Shih Huang would be a more balanced one, the paper concluded, finding both good and bad in him, and by implication, evidently, in

Meritorious Services

Moreover, the paper recalled, in their many paeans to Chin Shih Huang, the radicals had not re-ferred to the important role played by the "masses" in all his accomplishments nor to the "meritorious services of his generals."

This appeared to be a veiled attempt to redress earlier Communist accounts of the Chinese revolution, which have tended to ascribe all successes to Mao personally and to ignore the contributions of others. Another article in the party paper this week made the point even more clearly.

Recounting what it said were the falsehoods in articles by the radicals about one of Chin Shih Huang's generals, Wang Chien, the paper said that the radicals had maligned him in order to "pull down the group of long-tested leading comrades in our liberation army."

Dayan Says He Still Opposes Plane Deal

But Will Accept Congress Decision

By Robert Siner

WASHINGTON. April 27 (1HT)-Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan told a group of senainrs today that while his country is strongly opposed to President Carter's plan to sell warplanes to the Arabs, it would accept the sale if it were approved by Congress. Mr. Dayan, who is in Washington for two days of talks with Sec-relary of State Cyrus Vance and other U.S. officials, made the statement during a breakfast meeting with members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. Meantime, the arms-sale package, which links the sale of U.S. planes to Israel, Egypt and Saudi Arabia, got a boost from House International Relations Committee Chairman Clement Zablocki, D-Wis. Rep. Zablocki said that he believes that he can get enough votes in his committee to kill a resolution vetoing the sale, adding that if the panel kills the resolution "that fin-

Mr. Powell said that the President is sympathetic to the fears of critics that the planes could be used against Israel and added that Mr. Carter "will do anything consistent with the national interest, to ac-commodate their[the Israelis']

An opposing view was presented y Sen. Jacob Javits, R-N.Y., who, following a meeting with Secretary of nine senators who met with Mr. Vance to express their concern over the sale.

Mr. Dayan, who met yesterday with Mr. Vance and national secur-ity adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski and will hold further meetings with the secretary of state today, following his session with the senators, made clear that the Israeli government strongly opposes the sales. "We feel the sale of jet planes in Sandi Arabia and Egypt will endanger Israel, so we oppose it," he explained. "We do not accept the concept of a package deal. We think the issue of providing arms to Israel should be dealt with on its merits and not in a package."

merits and not in a package." Later, Sen. Javits said that Mr.

Dayan expressed an optimistic view of both the future of Israeli-U.S. relations and the stalled Mideast talks.

Neither Mr. Dayan nor U.S. officials would say what the Israeli forcials would say what the Israeli forcian minister discussed during his meetings with Mr. Vance and Mr. Brzezinski, but presumably the talks covered the Israeli position on withdrawal from the West Bank of withdrawal from the West Bank of the Jordan River, Israeli opposition to the Carter arms sales package and the possibility of resuming the Israeli-Egyptian peace talks.

U.S. Polls Show Carter Reaches His Lowest in Public Popularity

WASHINGTON, April 27 (UPI)-President Carter's job performance has hit its lowest point in his presidency, according to the latest Gallup and Harris polls. The latest Gallup Poll and Harris Survey results, released yesterday, suggested that Mr. Carter's 15-month low was attributed to a large degree, but not exclusively, to the President's handling of the economy.

According to The Washington Post, Gallup reported that 39 per cent of Americans approved of Mr. Carter's performance, a drop of nine percentage points since a survey last month.

Harris said that two-thirds of adult Americans view Mr. Carter's job performance negatively, while Gallup found less than half disapproving of the President's performance. U.S. Issues Alert to Workers Exposed to Asbestos

Solar Possibilities

Sunshine is everybody's favorite answer to the dilemmas of energy policy. Solar energy doesn't pollute the atmosphere. You can't make bombs out of it. The supply isn't declining. But since it's so attractive, why isn't it being exploited more rapidly?

The technology for heating water, and for keeping houses warm, is fully developed and commercially available. Although solar generation of electricity is not quite so far along, it's progressing nicely. But there is one drawback, and it is important. Solar energy is comparatively expensive.

The collectors—whether the little panel on the roof for the bath water, or the futuristic arrays of mirrors out in the desert-are costly. The people currently installing solar equipment are doing it as a matter of environmental principle. But the practice is not going to become widespread so long as it costs less to do the same job with oil or gas.

The present outpourings of exhortation to go solar generally touch very lightly on that point, when they touch it at all. There's an illuminating little example of interest-group politics here. Most of the organizations that campaign for solar solutions are also vehement defenders of price controls on oil and natural gas. The controls hold fuel prices low, which encourages waste and undercuts the new solar technology. The greatest determinant of the use of solar energy in this country will be the relative cost of the competing fuels. Of all the things that Congress can do right now to promote solar energy, the most effective would be to deregulate gas

Beyond cost, the restraints on solar power fall mostly in the category of habit and caution. Mortgage lenders are disinclined to provide loans for equipment that they regard as unconventional. It takes time to recruit and train the armies of contractors and mechanics capable of installing and fixing those systems. In some areas, housing codes get in the way. But like the price controls on oil and gas, these impediments are man-made, selfimposed and-if the country wants to do it-

According to the standard forecasts, solar energy will make only a marginal contribution to U.S. needs by the end of the century. But the President's Council on Environmental Quality has just published a much more optimistic view. The CEQ argues that, by the end of this century, the sun could provide fully one-fourth of the country's energy requirements. That would be a very happy prospect, if it were possible. Unfortunately, so large a gain is not possible. The reasons can be discerned in the long quarrel, now entering its second year, over President Carter's energy bill, the central strategy of which is to end the present artificially low pricing of oil and gas. But neither is it necessary to stand still.

When all of the impediments and limitations are stated, one signal truth remains: Solar energy is the safest and most satisfactory of all sources. Under present policy, there are only three ways to meet this country's growing demand for energy. The three are, of course, imported oil, coal and nuclear fission—and the current drift of events favors the first two, which are also the most dangerous of all the possible solutions. The Carter administration has not given much leadership in behalf of the solar alternative, no doubt because the Department of Energy has been endlessly entangled in the energy bill.

What's needed now is an array of solar demonstration projects, far beyond the present modest scale, to disseminate knowledge of the equipment and to acquire broad experience with its performance and reliability. Every collector panel installed will mean a little less foreign oil coming into the country, and a little less coal smoke going into the air. That's not a bad reason to start spending money, both public and private, on solar plumbing.

A Fair Deal for Micronesia

The United States has been under international pressure to resolve the status of Micronesia, a U.S. "strategic trust" and the last of the post-World War II United Nations trusteeships. Now, after almost a decade of negotiations between Washington and representatives of the Micronesian peoples, an agreement has been reached that seems to meet the needs of both sides. It promises an end to trusteeship in accord with the oft-stated commitment by the United States to human Micronesia is made up of 2,000 islands spread over an area of the Pacific Ocean approximately as large as the United States. The 120,000 Micronesians living there are linguistically and culturally diverse, and there is no certainty that they will remain a single political unit once the U.S. trusteeship ends. A referendum next July could result in one, two or three mini-states, or, conceivably, chaos. U.S. policies over two decades have produced a generation of Micronesians with unrealistic expectations of their economic potential and there is no telling how they will take to the greater autonomy and responsibility that lie ahead.

The agreement does not provide for full independence, a status that does not seem to have many advocates on either side. The Micronesians are aware that they are too few and too scattered to be able to defend themselves against external attack, and in any case they know that they will need U.S. economic aid for years to come. The U.S. interest in the area derives from its strategic importance as well as concern for the future of the Micronesians. A lesser, if more tangible, factor is the missile test base on Kwajalein.

The agreement creates a form of relationship to be called "free association" between Micronesia and the United States. The Micronesians will run their internal affairs and much of their foreign affairs, while depending on the United States for security and defense, as well as aid. Even this loose relationship must be reviewed in 15 years and much of it can be terminated at the will of either side. The arrangement must still be approved by Congress and a UN-supervised referendum of the Micronesian peoples. It deserves support as an honest effort to reach a fair solution.

International Opinion

The Namibia Plan

South Africa's acceptance of the Namibia [South-West Africa] plan produced by the five Western members of the Security Council is a courageous and praiseworthy act of statesmanship. Certainly it can be criticized on the grounds that the South Africans, under constant pressure from the Five, have made far too many concessions to the SWAPO terrorists. As a result there must be grave doubts as to whether the plan, with its provisions for free elections leading up to independence at the end of the year, will be much more than a fig leaf to cover a terrorist takeover ... The West owes it to the majority of Namibian tribes, who, with the whites, support the plan, to see that it is properly and fairly implemented. This is all the more obligatory in view of the statement by the terrorist leader, Mr. [Sam] Nujoma, that he is only interested in imposing a Marxist dictatorship by force.

-From the Daily Telegraph (London).

In accepting the Western program for Namibia, [South African Prime Minister John] Vorster has emphasized those parts of it which his deadly opponent SWAPO finds most objectionable: a cease-fire, the retention of the police to maintain law and order, and the freezing of argument on the status of the port of Walvis Bay.

Whatever happens now, though, Mr. Vorster has put himself in the right. By being the first to accept the Western terms, on the assurance that they are not now negotiable, he has passed responsibility for the peaceful evolution of the state to the five countries [the United States, Britain, France, Canada and West Germany] which have acted as the contact group, and it may well become their embarrassing job to sell the terms to the reluctant United Nations General Assembly .still committed by its own resolution to recognize SWAPO as the only legitimate voice of the people.

Spain's Communists

One question the Spanish Communists only papered over at their congress is the future relationship between the main party and its "autonomous" counterparts in Catalonia (PSUC) and other regions with separatist tendencies. Observers noted that the main opposition to party chief Santiago Carrillo's line came from the PSUC Catalonia. The new party by-laws speak of "complete identity" between the PSUC and the main Spanish party, while at the same time providing for "complete PSUC autonomy in application of the general party lines."

There was a lawyer for the com-plaining party attacking the policy, and a legal officer of the British government defending it. That is a familiar scene in the United States—familiar since the Marbury case, 175 years ago, established the power of judges to hold acts of the

But it is an altogether strange idea in Britain. No written consitution limits official authority there. No government ordinarily has to justify any policy in terms of a higher law. The state at the bar of justice: The British political tradition knows no such spectacle.

A Symptom

What was happening in Strasbourg therefore, was a symptom of something extraordinary. Britain and 19 other countries have signed European Convention on Human Rights. Most, including Britain, have agreed to let their compliance with the convention be judged by the Strasbourg court, and have obeyed adverse decisions.

And the result, though hardly anyone has noticed it so far, is a beginning of constitutionalism.

The case this week was brought. by the Sunday Times of London, It involved what Britain's solicitor general, Peter Archer, told the court was "a human tragedy of im-mense proportions"—the birth of children horribly deformed, often without arms or legs, because their mothers had taken the drug thalidomide during their pregnancy.

In Britain more than 400 thali-domide children were born in or before 1961, when the drug was withdrawn. The parents brought legal actions for damages against the British distributor of the drug, the Distillers Co. For years there was no action on the cases except for periodic attempts to settle them by negotiations. Neither side wanted to go to trial.

Series Started

In 1972, more than 10 years after the tragedy, the Sunday Times began a series of articles, It described the children and their often desperate families. It suggested that the money offered by Distillers to settle the suits, about $8 million, was not enough. (Distillers, embarrassed, eventually paid $48 million.)
And it prepared an article, based on detailed company documents, indicating that Distillers had not tested the drug adequately before

But that last and most important would of course be unthinkable, and unconstitutional—in the United States. Otherwise no newspaper could have investigated Watergate because a civil damage suit had been brought by the Democratic Committee. The British contempt law in effect allows a lawsuit to stop public discussion of vital public issues. For years, because suits were pending, there was no real examination in Britain of the reasons for the thalidomide disaster. for the thalidomide disaste

Challenge

The Sunday Times, after losing in the British legal system, challenged the ban under Article 10 of the European Convention. The article, remainscent of the U.S. First Amendment, guarantees "freedom of expression." But it goes on to allow restrictions if "necessary in a low restrictions if "necessary in a democratic society" for certain purposes, such as "maintaining the authority and impartiality of the judiciary."

There are no exception clauses in there are no exception causes in the First Amendment, but the Su-preme Court has in fact allowed re-straints on freedom of speech and press under particular circum-stances. And so the argument in Strasbourg thus echoed familia U.S. debates about when restriction is justified. Counsel for the Sunday Times Anthony Lester, quoted Justice Brandeis's warning against fear as a reason for stopping speech: "Men feared witches and burned women." He urged the court to adopt Brandeis's formula that expression can be banned only if it threatens imminently to about a serious evil.

Reforms

"I know of no other democratic state," Lester said, that would sup-press "discussion of essential issues for 10 years"—and consider that "necessary" to protect the judicial process. Archier naturally wanted the court to withhold its hand and let Britain work out its own reforms, if any, in the law of contempt. His argument paralleled the familiar calls for self-restraint by the U.S. Supreme Court.

There was a special wonder in hearing these appeals to an international court with 10 judges from 10 different countries of Europe, Even Archer said he might one day tell his "grandchildren with pride" that he was there at the beginning of a new system. But that may depend on whether these judges have John Marshall's courage. Only thus can they make a reality of what the French, more evocatively, call la Cour Des Droits de l'Homme: the Court of the Rights of Man.

Muckrakers vs. Muck Makers

WASHINGTON—The former director of President Carter's Office of Management and Budget is only the latest in a long line of public officials who have complained they have been unfairly impaled by the press. Bert Lance, in a speech to the nation's editors on April 12, said: "There are more muckrakers around these days than muck makers." Lance's remark is one high point of such complaints.

In the first years of this century, especially in the magazines, a number of writers exposed the sins, and worse, of the robber barons, their political allies and sundry others. Lincoln Steffens described the "Shame of the Cities," Ida Tarbell disclosed the facts about Rockefeller and his Standard Oil trust. Ray Stannard Baker attacked the practices of the coal miners' union. All those stories were well grounded in

The Jungle

Then, in 1906, Upton Sinclair used fiction in "The Jungle" to dramatize evils of the meat-packing industry, a book that played a major role in passage of the first purefood laws.
President Theodore Roosevelt

Thus, we learn, — and not only we Romanians — but all the inhabitants of the planet, that we are living under the Sign of Ceansescu.

He had just read one such article (which phescu (an allusion to the three disone is not known) before attending a Gridiron Club dinner in spring, ers under his reign -- two floods and an earthquake.)

The people of the West are little concerned by what the Romanians think. They have dubbed Ceauses-1906. In his off-the-record spee that evening, the president lifted a phrase from "Pilgrim's Progress" to attack those who rake "the filth of cu.a "little David facing the gian! Goliath." They have shaken hands with him, offered him money and the floor," the "muckrakers."

Word of that sensational speech quickly got about, and a month lattechnology, then have courted him. er Roosevelt said it all publicly af-Could anything be more natural ter laying the cornerstone of what is now the Cannon Office Building. In that speech Roosevelt de-clared that "the man who never does anything else, who never thinks or speaks or writes, save of his feats with the muckraker, speedily becomes not a help to society, but one of the most potent forces of evil." It was a speech in which Roosevelt also proposed income and inheritance taxes, which did not then exist, to tap "fortunes swollen beyond all healthy limits." Roosevelt hailed as "a benefactor" writers or speakers who "with merciless severity" attack corruption—provided such attacks are "absolutely truthful."

Muckraking, in the negative sense Roosevelt used, "leads to a slander that may attack an honest man or even assail a bad man with

Puck magazine in 1880 depicts the unfavorable view of some of the press in the election of that year. In that presidential contest between James A. Garfield and Gen. Winfield Hancock, the press was full of Garfield's role in the Credit Mobilier scandal and a forged letter involving Chinese immigration. It also delved into Sen. Roscoe Conkling's attention to the wife of the ex-senator and ex-governor of Rhode Island, Kate Chase Sprague, whose father had been chief justice. Conkling was fair game not only because of his "turkey-gobbler strut," but also because he was a power in the Republican party who put his man, Chester A. Arthur, on the ticket with Garfield.

Thus, it simply is not true, as Lance would have it, that "something's happened lately" that didn't happen before in our history. That is simply the reflex of a man who has felt the muckraker's barb for the first time.

Since Watergate, the press has been examining and re-examining itself as to that distinction, and without much agreement on how or where to draw the line of separa-

Another key contributor is labor restraint, in keeping with a "peace accord" concluded 40 years ago between unions and management to help overcome the prewar reces-sion. Strike has since become a rather exotic word in Switzerland. Without much ado, wages jumped 76 per cent during six years up to 1975 hut are now moving up at a snail's pace.

Mr. Schlumpf also cited the central bank's restrictive policy on the money supply, as well as a sharp decline in consumer demand due to the recession and the connected departure from Switzerland of about 200,000 foreign workers and their families. And, of course, he pointed to Switzerland's traditional posi-tion as the world's No.1 in private savings, more than twice as much per capita as the United States.

California medical researcher has found, are as a consequence suffer-ing debilitating nerve damage with symptoms that mimic multiple sclerosis, a degenerative disease of the central nervous system.

Dr. Robert Layzer, an associate professor of neurology at the Uni-versity of California medical school in San Francisco, said in an inteview that six such cases have come to light in the last 17 months in California, Illinois, and Tennessee. He said evidence exists for a num-ber of similar cases and that the malady, never previously described in the world's medical literature, is not rare among dentists and other health professionals with easy access to nitrous oxide. The broad range of symptoms includes numbness in the fingers and toes and a progressive muscular weakness and loss of coordination. Some of the six patients suffered impotence, loss of bladder control. and difficulty walking. At least two were forced to suspend their dental practices. All experienced what Dr. Layzer described as a "strange elec-tric shock sensation" running along the spine upon tilting the head, a symptom usually associated with multiple sclerosis.

A Trio of Feydeau Farces Make a Festive Evening

By Thomas Quinn Curtiss enraged Strindberg, but it made

PARIS. April 27 (IHT)—"Boulevard Feydeau" (at the Theatre des Varietes) is a festive avenue of La Belle Epoque on which parade three one-act plays by the modern master of French farce. Andre Levasseur has done them up ravishingly in 1900 costumes and decor and they are being played by an allstar cast. They rock the house as they inevitably do.

With the exception of Rostand, no dramatist in France matched Georges Feydeau's magnetism be-tween 1890 and the end of World War I. His Rabelaisian humor never failed to delight his faithful followers, but it was too broad, too common, too much, for refined consideratioo. He was always enormously popular, but it was impossi-ble to "recognize" him. He sat be-oeath the critical salt until 20 years after his death.

Then, in 1942, the Comedie-Francaise to put some light into the gloom of the Occupation, staged as a curtain-raiser his "Feu la Mere de Madame." It was an instant hit and the House of Moliere inscribed so many of his plays in its repertory that when Andre Malraux became minister of culture, he reproved the management for per-forming Feydeau more frequently than the classics.

Feydeau wrote in defiance of Victorian decorum, mentioning the unmentionable on every occasion to the joyous howls of his spectators. In English adaptation his comedies were rigorously revised, a stolen kiss usually being substituted for adultery, but the comic surprises that sprang from his scenarios were funny enough to survive such mutilations. What his dramatis personae did and said were not for Anglo-Saxon eyes and ears in the unpermissive age and underwent toning-down. Several lines of his, had they been spoken in accurate English translation, would have brought the police on the gallop in New York or London eveo two decades ago.

Devastating

By inference, he questioned conventions. For example, where a moralizing playwright would prove that a husband had a perfect right to sboot the man with whom his wife had dallied. Feydeau would hint that it was the husband who ought to be shot. Bourgeois marriage is the subject of all three of his miniature plays at the Theatre des Varietes. Only Strindberg has left a more devastating picture of that institution as it was in the early century. The mere thought of it

The three revived farces, the ripe fruit of his late years, expose the dubious comforts of what the Irish critic, Ernest Boyd, once termed "that horrible place called home."
Feydeau spent little time at home, preferring Maxim's, and finally fled the hearth for a hotel. His work, however, is not autobiographical, for he was a bohemian and a snob, hoping against hope that royal blood ran in his veins. Nonetheless,

Feydeau, the cynical boulevardier, be was a keen student of the miser-ies that plagued his middle-class contemporaries.

In "Feu la Mere de Madame" a poor fish who has attended the Quaz'art ball in the fancy dress of Louis XIV and who has been caught in the rain on coming home at 4 a.m. is berated by his wife for his tardy return and everything else. Their nightly row is interrupted by a messenger who carries the sad tidings of the death of the wife's mother. After the mother-in-law situation has been acrimoniously reviewed, it develops that the message was for the family next deer.

"Mais N'Te Promene Donc Pas Toute Nue" coocerns an ambitious politician whose future is endan-gered by his sloppy wife's habit of receiving guests in dishabille. Clemenceau, who lives across the way, though unseen, sees all, keeping an eagle eye on the embarrassing happenings.

In "On Purge Bebe," a porcelain manufacturer tries to close a deal with an official of the war department. His plan is to equip every soldier in the army with an un-breakable chamber pot. Due to the incessant interference of his spouse, who is obsessed with her child's constipation, both the deal and chamber pots are smashed.

Feydean was the most exacting of dramatists, leaving nothing to chance. His plays are mathematical exercises that brook no alternations-down to the minutest detail. Unlike the plays of Shakespeare, Racine and others, they provide no opportunities for improvisation, thus being protected against wild-

Raymond Gerome has directed the present collection of minifarces following the author's stipulations explicitly so that not a single bit of business is slighted. Audience reaction has ant, as Feydeau forsaw, changed and these plays are greeted with guffaws as loud as those probably beard at their premieres. Seen in retrospect, bowever,

She, the daughter of Franz Liszt and the wife of the conductor-pia-nist Hans von Bulow, was wooed away from her husband by Wagner (who was also Bulow's best friend) and bore him three children. When she died in 1930 at age 92, she was buried alongside Wagner.

Wagner's heirs now run the annual summer festival, and although they have had their differences in the past, they were unanimous on one issue when the Wagner archives were offered for sale in 1970: The material heritage of the great man was to remain in Bay-reuth, intact and made available to researchers and the public. When the West German government outbid everyone else for the collection and paid close to $3 million for it in 1973, it was understood that eventually the empty Villa Wahnfried would be converted into a Richard Wagner Museum. One important item is still missing from the museum, however, When the cornerstone of the festival house was laid, Wagner put a metal box with some of his "secrets" into the concrete, giving orders that it not be opened until a hundred years after his death. Music historians and Wagner buffs are waiting impatiently for that day, which falls in 1983.

Lady Christian Martin, the las Shuckburgh descendant to own it. sold it for an undisclosed sum to Charles Scribner's Sons publishers of New York in 1951. It was sold two years later to collector Arthur Houghton jr., who resold it to Mr. Kraus.

The Bible lacked one page from the Old Testament and four from the New Testament until Mr. Houghton had two pages inserted from another incomplete Gutea-berg Bible he owned. The Shuck-burgh Bible now is missing only three pages: A complete Gutenberg Bible was sold in New York to the city of Stuttgart earlier this month for a record $2 million.

The Shuckburgh Bible is one of 48 known to remain from the anproximately 185 copies Johann Gu-tenberg printed in Mainz around 1450 with the world's first movable metal type. West Germany now has a 12 Gutenberg Bibles and East Germany has two. There are two nearly com-plete works in the Guenberg Museum, which also has an incomplete volume on loan from the city of Trier.

The Shuckburgh Bible will be recorded on microfilm, which will be made available to scholars.

The Bible itself will be displayed behind bulletproof glass, with slides of the finest pages projected in a viewer for the public.

Stockholder Apathy May Block Financing

DETROIT, April 27 (AP-DJ)— Chrysler is about to take its first major step toward financing an ambinous plan to rejuvenate its product line and has discovered it faces an unexpected roadblock-some of its own shareholders.

Chrysler is seeking stockholder authority at Tuesday's annual meeting to create new shares of preferred and common stock, which could then be sold to raise sizable amounts of sorely needed cash. But, due to a combination of cash. But, due to a combination of apathy on the part of some share-holders and active opposition by others, worried officials coocede the future of this crucial financing heme is in doubt.

"I am reasonably confident we will win, but it's going to be close. It won't be an easy vote," frets vice-president Paul Hemen.

The company estimates it will spend $7.5 billion over the next five vears to redesign its cars and reequip its plants, and it will be hardpressed to come up with that mooey. The company suffered big losses in the past two quarters, is expected to be in the red for the year and has warned of "depressed" earnings for some time

Thus, it expects to need large amounts of outside financing. That almost certainly means the compaoy will have to take on large amounts of new debt and may have to sell off or close some of its current operations.

Both General Motors and Ford are well into ambitious programs to redesign their car lines. "If we can't complete our program, we are going to be a smaller company than we are today," warns Mr. Heinen.

Official Affirms Faith in Dollar's Role as Reserve

From Ware Dispatches
ZURICH, April 27—The president of Switzerland's National Bank today affirmed his faith in the dollar as the world's reserve currency, saying it is unrealistic to think it could be replaced in that

However, National Bank President Fritz Leutwiler added, the weakness of the dollar is the biggest monetary problem facing the European nations as well as the oil-producing countries cannot re-store exchange-rate stability unless they work together with the United States, he said in his report to the bank's annual meeting.

While a basket of hard currencies could be used to intervene on mon-ey markets, be said, this would "supplement rather than replace the dollar."

"One must warn against the illusion that the dollar can be replaced or even forgotten in exchange-rate pobcy," he said. "Strengthened En-ropean currency cooperation, if it is to really lead to o lasting stabilization of exchange-rate conditions, must therefore oot be directedagainst the dollar but must aim at the inclusion of the American currency.

The cooperation of the oil-producing states, whose financial transactions can exert considerable influence on currency events, most be sought," he added.

He also said the nation's currentaccount surplus could rise to 9 bil-lion francs (about $4.6 billion) this year from an estimated 8.3 billion last year, for the second largest surplus among industrial countries, ex-ceeded only by Japan.

He said that Switzerland's net foreign exchange interventions in the six months ended in March ex-ceeded 2 billioo Swiss francs (about $1.02 billion). He said that the central bank could not sacrifice the management of money supply for exchange-rate policy. "We have already gone far enough," Mr. Lentwiler said. In February, the money supply, M-1, rose 10.1 percent from the year-earlier month. sharply higher than the target of 5 percent for the year.

Profits Growth in U.S. Slows

NEW YORK, April 27 (AP-DJ)—U.S. corporate-profit growth slowed in the first quarter due to severe winter weather, the coal strike and a number of other adverse factors.

According to a survey of 496 major companies by the Wall Street Journal, first-quarter after-tax profits showed a 3.4-percent rise, the 10th consecutive quarterly gain over year-earlier figures, compared with an 8.4-percent gaio shown in a similar survey the previous quarter. However, analysts say that firstquarter earnings declined on a seasonally adjusted annual basis from the fourth-quarter level.

To the first quarter, says Douglas Rice of the consulting firm Data Resources, "increased social-secur-ity taxes, lagging productivity, higher interest rates, weather-induced plant closings and restricted coal supplies combined with poor sales results to squeeze

Profits Seen Up 9-to-10% for Year

Most analysts still expect profits for this year to rise 9-to-10 percent from 1977, assuming Congress approves President Carter's tax proposals which in-clude a cut on Oct. 1 in the top corporate tax rate to 45 from 48 percent and a more liberal investment

But Rep. Al Ullman, D-Ore., chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, says that a tax bill is not likely to take effect before Jao. 1. "In that case," a Bank of New York official says, "I would expect profits to rise about 8.5 percent this year instead of 9.5 percent.

Assuming the tax proposals do take effect Oct. I, William Cox. the Commerce Department's deputy chief economist, foresees an 8-to-9-percent gain to profits over last year. He predicts a gain of "moderately" less than that if the proposals are delayed. "Profits will come back rather well in the second quarter," he says, adding that the expected rebound in economic activity should bring productivity gains which should raise profits.

Industries showing significant gains included bunks, airlioes, electrical-equipment producers, machine-100l manufacturers, Western railroads picking up additional coal business and building pliers, although some were hurt by delayed ship-

Others, notably autos, steel, utilities, rubber and tire and Eastern railroads, posted declines. Those posting mixed results were oil companies, lead and zinc concerns and the pulp and paper sector. Profits in the chemicals industry were above depressed year-earlier levels but the outlook for the year remains dim. Earnings were generally up in the aluminum industry in the first quarter, due to price increases and a more profitable mix of products.

Fed Pushes Rates Up, Stocks Fall

Profit-Taking Cited After Recent Gains

NEW YORK, April 27 (Reuters)—Wall Street slammed the brakes on its powerful rally, as investors cashed in their profits and drove prices on the New York Stock Exchange down sharply across the board.

The Dow Jones industrial average, off 10.13 to 826.84 at 3 p.m., elosed off 10.05 at 826.92. Volume totaled 35.47 million shares, down from the 44.43 million shares yesterday. Declines outnumbered advances 1,056-to-428. Priees were lower in active trading on the American Stock

The downturn widehed to the afternoon when the Federal Reserve indicated it was tightening credit further. The key lederal funds rate rose to 7 1/4 percent without any intervention by the Fed, market operators said, convincing them the Fed has undertaken further tightening of credit policy. Dealers said yields on treasury bills increased rapidly and bond prices fell. The 13-week treasury bill was quoted at 6.36 percent bid compared with 6.21 percent hid earlier.

Later however, the New York Fed entered the market to add temporary bank reserves through fourday repurchase agreements as the fed funds rate moved to 7 5/16 percent from 7 1/4 percent, dealers said. Analysis had said recently they believed the new target set by the Fed for the rate was raised to?

After the market closed, the Fed reported the nation's M-I money supply rose $800 million while the M-2, a broader measure, gained $1.9 bloom, Chrysler fell is to 10 is.

Exhibition and Symposium for the best choice of location for effective worldwide economic activity

Basle/Switzerland, May 23 to 26,1978: at Inter-Idex 78,150 state and semi-state organizations for the promotion of economic development representing 15 important countries transmit first-class inforuation of a location, and to bring together those offering free production capacity and those interested in utilizing it.

The exhibitors from Austria, Belgium, Brazil, Canada, Denmark, Federal Republic of Germany, France, Great Britain, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Netherlands, Spain, Switzerland, USA are grouped in national sectors and every organization participating can supply tailormade information for the special needs of industrial firms concerned with the choice of location.

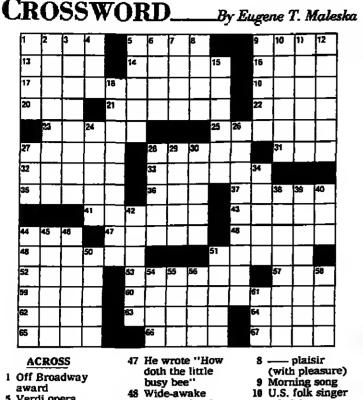

An important part of Inter · Idex 78 is a symposium devoted to the basic problems of economic development in the individual countries and to corresponding solutions.

Inter · Idex 78 is supported by a committee of patrons comprising

MARY BAKER EDDY

The Years of Authority

By Robert Peel. Holt, Rinehart & Winston. 361 pp. $16.95.

Reviewed by Kenneth A. Briggs

MARY Baker Eddy was 72 IVI years old when she returned to a Concord, N. H., country estate in 1892. But the move to "Pleasant View hardly signified a retreat from her single-minded devotioo to the Christian Science movement, which she had founded and nurtured through its early troubles. In the quiet countryside she would gather her energies for the even tougher struggle to defend the church against more savage attacks and to provide it with a foundation that would endure without her. Since we are oow passing through a period when religious liberty is facing oew tests, it is well to recall the trials of Mrs. Eddy. Just as certain current cult groups, such as Hare Krishna, are being threatened by angry opponents. Christian Science was severely tested by pub-lic scorn, court fights and prosecutorial journalism.

Robert Peel, completing his third and final volume on the life of Mrs. Eddy, pictures this remarkable woman in her remote command beadquarters, alert to all dangers, directing all church affairs with surprising confidence and maintaining an indomitable spirit, which be-came her chief legacy to genera-tions of her followers.

Many of her beliefs were clearly heretical in the eyes of traditional Christianity. By insisting that matter did not exist, for example, she flew in the face of the key doctrine of the Incarnation, which holds that the Word was made "flesh" in the person of Jesus.

lo retrospect, however, the general direction of her teaching, as ex-pounded in her basic text, "Science and Health," was oot so far out of line with common assumptions. She was, above all, oot a theologian or philosopher, but a pragmatist who argued that "the error of the ages is preaching without practice" and demanded that faith be demonstrated by healing. Although dominant American Protestantism formally rested on a "salvation by faith, not works" cornerstone, the opposite standard prevailed in dai-ly life. If faith did not somehow make a visible difference, its claimants made a scant impression.

Mrs. Eddy's contention that Christianity was properly seen as the application of spiritual lawsthe application or spurmer therefore a science—met with opprinciple was difficult to grasp.
"All is Mind and Mind's idea," she wrote, explaining that anything that did not belong to the spirit had neither truth oor reality. Since mat-ter did oot belong to this category of truth, it belonged to the realm of the mortal and "unreal." At times, she sounds like an Eastern spiritualist declaring that the visible world is illusion. At other points, she seems to state in a more radical manner the long-held Christian concept that the overwhelming primacy of God as spirit renders the tangible world insignificant.
The founder of Christian Science spent endless hours trying to sort these issues out of those who found it difficult to understand. She also labored to convince those about her that she should not be the object of veneration, though her actions sometimes belied that goal. She remained the chief interpreter of these matters to the end of her life maintaining that Christian Science could only be understood by under-standing her correctly.

Peel has written a well-documented account of the final two decades of this endeavor. He is sympathetic and somewhat apologetic toward his subject, but not distressingly so. Mrs. Eddy emerges as a complex, fascinating woman though Peel's concern for historical detail sometimes results in a ploid-ing style. There was much drams in this period. Mrs. Eddy incurred the wrath of followers and outsiders alike. Mark Twain used his satiric weapons against her. McClure's magazine, with the help of noted muckrakers, took after her as did Joseph Pulitzer's New York-World. Some of these newspaper attacks were bent on proving she was crazy, held captive by ruthless cour-tiers, or even dead. The World once ran a series that purported to show her as a serile old lady and used as visual proof a picture of another WOMAD.

She was taken to court twice, ooce hy a former student, Josephine Woodbury, who brought libel charges after a bitter power struggle, and, in 1907, by a former New Hampshire senator, William Chandler, who sued her for mental incompetence. She won both cases, characteristically directing the course of her own legal defense over the objections of her highly re-spected team of lawyers.

Through these years, the move-ment was growing, attracting large numbers of well-educated urban dwellers, including many doctors and lawyers. By 1906, according to Yale historian Sidney Ahlstrom, there were 85,700 practitioners across the United States, bringing the message of healing to those who suffered.

'Someone once said to me, 'No one but a fool or a woman would have written Science and Health, and he was right," she wrote. "Either a fool who did not know the consequences of writing that book. or a woman who would have humility enough to go down and survive the persecution."

Among Mrs. Eddy's largely unacknowledged contributions to social history was her emphasis on the equality of women in Christian Science. Her central belief in the power of spiritual healing must also be counted as an important, likewise unattributed, factor in present. attitudes toward health care. As confidence in medical science has declined, there has been rising interest in the causes of disease outside the realms of physiology. If the surveys are accurate, a staggering percentage of reported illness is as-cribed to "psychosomatic" causes. The trend is toward preventive. medicine, toward the conviction that doctors aid but do not cure, toward the belief that affairs of the mind, psychic or spiritual, determine the affairs of the body.

Although Peel notes that Mrs.
Eddy "seldom apologized" for any of her ideas or actions, she did make some compromises. She took morphine for kidney stones exbut only helped her get to the point where she could attain a metaphyscal cure. But her overall assessment, although it led to her vilification as a fraud in her own time. was couched in language that we increasingly adopt ourselves.

Duran a Champion In the Ring or Street

By Dave Anderson

NEW YORK, April 27 (NYT) —When most people think of boxers, they still think of Muhammad Ali; when boxing people think of boxers. they think of Roberto Duran, puneh for punch the best boxer in the world

"Roberto said he wish he was bigger so he could fight as a heavyweight," his interpreter, Lins Henriquez, was saying. "He knows if he was a heavyweight, he would he the champion."

Wearing a metallie gray windhreaker over his bare chest, blue corduroy pants, blue and yellow sneakers and the unshaven look of someone you would not like to see peering out of an alley at you, Duran, the undisputed world lightweight champion following his recent knockout of Esteban delesus, was sitting in a hotel coffee shop. He was waiting to go to Gleason's Gym where he has been preparing for his 10-round nontitle bout with Adolfo Viruet at Madison Square Garden tonight.

But before Duran arrived in the coffee shop, one of his trainers, Freddy Brown, an unlighted cigar stuck in his wonderful face that resembles an old boxing glove, was talking about the streetfighter's fury that blazes inside the 26-year-old Panamanian boxer.

"He's a born fighter, he don't want to know nothin' when you get in there," Brown said. "He wants to win. He wants to destroy you Brown has been working with Duran for six years now but in his old sweater and old pants, he has been carrying a bucket up into boxing rings for half a century.

"The only gry I've seen anywhere close to him," the old trainer said, "would be Henry Armstrong."

Armstrong held three titles simultaneously 40 years ago — the middleweight, welterweight and lightweight.

"But the fury," somebody was saying to Luis Henriquez now, "ask Roberto where the fury in him came from?"

"He said he was born this way," the interpreter said after a conversation in Spanish with the lightweight champion. "He said his mother always told him not to fight in the streets because he was destroying kids."

Duran grey up in Chorillo Panama, near the Canal Zooe border.

Duran grew up in Chorillo, Panama, near the Canal Zooe border. "He said he used to swim in the canal when he wasn't fighting in the

Convincing Argument

Duran pointed to a scar on the big knuckle of his right middle finger.

"He got that scar from hitting a kid's tooth," the interpreter said. "The kid was throwing other kids in the water. One of the other kids couldn't swim but this kid threw him in the water anyway. That's when Roberto hit him and cut his knuckle. But after that the other kid didn't come back

"Where there any other bullies there?" "He said there were a lot of bullies and he had to fight them all," the interpreter said. "If you went out of your oeighborhood, there were always kids who would pick on you and then you had to fight." Duran smiled now at the memory of a scuffle at a dance.

"He said once when he was 15, he knocked out three men in one night." the interpreter said. "Not kids, men in their 20's, grown men. They came over to talk to the girl he was with at a dance and he didn't like what one man said to her, so be knocked him out with one punch."

At the table Duran made a fist with his right hand and smacked his left hand with it three times.

Three Punches in All

"Then another man got into it and he knocked him out, then the third man got into it and he knocked him out too. Each with one punch. Then the cops took them to jail - him and the three men. One of the men had to go to the jail hospital because they thought he might die. Roberto was there in jail from 2 in the morning until 6 in the morning when the one man finally came around. The cops asked the three men how did they let this little 15-year-old kid beat them up and one of them told the cops he didn't know who hit him."

"Whatever happened to the girl?" He said he never saw her again. But he said he had fights like that all the time then. Sometimes he and his brother Domingo would wind up fighting three or four other kids. Once he even fought his hrother. But he said that time, the mother got in and beat up the both of them." "Where is Domingo now?"

"Domingo takes care of Roberto's big house in Panama where next to Gen. Omar Torrijos he is the most important man in the country. When be returned after beating delesus, there were 50,000 people at the airport His only loss, against 61 victories with 52 knockouts, was a 10-round

The United States is the only nontitle decision to delesus in 1972 at the Garden. "He just went along in that fight," Brown was saying now. "But I don't think he'll do it this time. The title is more important to him now. He doesn't want to lose to anybody anytime now. The next hig fight for him He Can Be Hit is with Arguello."

Alex Arguello of Nicaragua holds the World Boxing Council version of the junior lightweight title. "Arguello's a good boxer, a good puocher," Brown said, "But he's a stand-up fighter, he takes punches. Nobody can take this guy's punches."

"Has he ever talked to Ali?" "One time they were both in Miami training." Henriquez said, "and Ali told him, 'I'm glad you're not a heavyweight.' George Foreman told him the same thing."

"Suppose," somebody said, "just suppose he and Ali got into a fight on the street, what does he think would happen?"

During that conversation in Spanish, the lightweight champion's eyes flashed as he made another fist with his right hand.

"He said he would beat the hell out of Ali," the interpreter said. "He said as a kid, he always beat up bigger guys."

Observer

Solemn and Serious

By Russell Baker

NEW YORK—Here is a letter of friendly advice. "Be serious," it says. What it means, of course, is, "Be solemn." The distinction between being serious and being solemn seems to be vanishing among Americans, just as surely as the distinction between "oow" and "presently" and the distinction between liberty and making a mess. Beiog solemn is easy. Being se-rious is hard. You probably have to be born serious. or at least go through a very teresting child-hood. Childreo

almost always begio by heing serious, which is what makes them so entertaining when compared to Adults, on the whole, are solemn. The transition from seriousness to solemnity occurs in adolescence, a period in which Nature, for reasons of her own, plunges people into foolish frivolity. During this period the organism struggles to regain dignity by recovering childhood's genius for seriousness. It is usually a bopeless cause.

As a result, you have to settle for solemnity. Beiog solemn has almost nothing to do with being serious, but oo the other band, you can't go oo being adolescent forever, unless you are in the performing arts, and anyhow most people can't tell the difference. In fact, though Americans talk a great deal about the virtue of being serious, they generally prefer people who are solemn over people who are serious.

Io politics, the rare candidate who is serious, like Adlai Stevenson, is easily overwhelmed by one who is solemn, like General Eisenhower. This is probably because it is hard for most people to recognize seriousness, which is rare, especially in politics, hut comfortable to endorse solemnity, which is as commonplace as jogging.

Jogging is solemn. Poker is serious. Once you can grasp that as a pronoun is solemn. Making distinction, you are on your way to pronouncements on American socienlightenment. To promote the cause, I submit the following list from which the vital distinction should emerge more clearly.

AMERICA CALLING

ANNOUNCEMENTS

(1) Shakespeare is serious. David Susskind is solemn. (2) Chicago is serious. California

(3) Blow-dry hair styling on anchor men for local televison news shows is solemn. Henry James is serious.

(4) Falling in love, getting married, having children, getting divorced and fighting over who gets the car and the Wedgwood are all serious. The new sexual freedom is

(5) Playboy is solemn. The New Yorker is serious.
(6) S.J. Perelman is serious. Norman Mailer is solemn.

(7) The Roman Empire was solemn. Periclean Athens was serious.

(8) Arguing about "structured programs" of anything is solemn. So are talking about "utilization."

attending conferences oo the future of anything, and group bathing when undertaken for the purpose of getting to know yourself better. or at the prescription of a swami. Taking a long walk by yourself duriog which you devise a foolproof scheme for robbing Cartier's is

(9) Washington is solemn. New York is serious. So is Las Vegas, hut Miami Beach is solemn. (10) Humphrey Bogart movies about private eyes and Randolph

Scott movies about gunslingers are serious. Modern movies that are sophisticated jokes about Humphrey Bogart movies and Randolph Scott movies are solemn.

I make no apology for being sol-emn rather than serious. Nor should anyone else. It is the national attitude. It is perfectly understandable. It is hard to be Periclean Athens. It is hard to be Shake-speare, It is hard to be S.J. Perelman. It is hard to be serious.

And yet, one cannot go on toward eternity without some flimsy attempt at dignity. Adolescence will oot do. One must at least make the effort to resume childhood's lost seriousness, and so, with the best of intentions, one tries his best, only to eod up being vastly, uninterestingly solemn.

Writing sentences that use "one" ety is solemn. Turning yourself off when pronouncements threaten to gush is oot exactly serious, although it shows a shred of wisdom.

Naturalist Finds Chimps, Alas, Share Human Flaw

By Thomas O'Toole

WASHINGTON (WP)—Chimpanzees behave so much like humans they occasionally kill one another.

"I had once thought that chimpanzees resembled humans only had once thought the believe the second of the believe that the second of the second in their gentler traits, like holding hands, embracing and kissing," naturalist Jane Goodall said at a rare news cooference here. "The horrifying thiog is they bear a strong similarity to humans m other ways. We saw one community of chimps systematically attack and kill another."

Not once did Dr. Goodall use the word "murder" to describe the five attacks she saw in the wilds of Tanzania io the last four years, but it was clear from her descriptions that she felt murder was on the minds of the I1 male chimps who annihilated a group of seven male chimps.

"The attacks usually involved young males, who usually used their hands, feet and teeth," Dr. Goodall said. "But we saw one old male pick up a rock and throw it at a prostrate victim of another's attack. It showed chimps are closer to humans than I thought."
When she arrived at the Gombe National Park 18 years ago to begin what has become a lifelong study of chimpanzees. Dr. Goo-dall said that she discovered a single community of about 40 chimps living together in what was then harmony. It was largely this harmony that Dr. Goodall has popularized in films and In 1970, Dr. Goodall said at the offices of the National Geographic Society, the community of chimps began to show signs of division, and by 1972 a group of seven males and three females left the community and formed their own to the south of the first First Attack

Two years later, Dr. Goodall said, she witnessed the first attack by five males of the original community on a single male of the splinter crowd. The attack was "brutal and savage." lasted 20 minutes and resulted in the death of the male who had been attacked, she said.

Dr. Goodall saw four more attacks and said that she thinks there were others that she did not see. All the attacks involved at least three and as many as five males from the original community who terrorized small numbers of the other group. The splinter group apparently did not try to retaliate. Dr. Goodall said that she saw a gang of males kill an older female in the splinter group, and she said that she saw another gang attack the last surviving male less than a year ago.

"They hroke his leg and beat him up," Dr. Goodall said of the last killing. "Nobody's seen his body, but almost surely he's dead. Nobody's seen him since the attack."

In attempting to figure out the motive for the killings. Dr. Goodall said that the only explanation is that the original group grew to where there was a preponderance of adult males in the

"I think the two groups split up because there were too many males," she said, "I think when they gathered together there was too moch tension."

In sharp contrast to the newly ovserved violence among the chimps. Dr. Goodall said that she also witnessed the first chimpanzee twins known to be born anywhere. She said the twins are still alive at the age of 6 mooths. They were given the names Gyre

Mother's Problems

"Every time I see them I can't believe they're real," Dr. Goodall said of the twins. "You have oo idea how difficult it is for a chimpanzee mother of twins to cope with two babies."

Melissa cuddles twins born last October.

Dependent on their mother's milk for the first three years of life, the twin chimps have lived their first six months clinging to their mother's stomach or back. At times, one of the twins clings to the other, and several times Dr. Goodall has seen one of the twins fall "because they're so small they just don't cling well."

One of the twins hurt its foot once, Dr. Goodall said, making it difficult for the mother (named Melissa) to travel with the babies. When the mother moved through the trees, the injured twin would cry so loudly the mother would stop and make a nest for the twins to rest.

The hardest thing for the mother of twins to do is set aside time for feeding. Normally, adult chimps, and especially breast-feeding mothers, eat for seven or eight hours every day. Melissa ate for only one hour.

"We gave her bananas with antibiotics in them, and this helped both Melissa and the injured twin," Dr. Goodall said. "It was only the second time we've interfered medically." The first was to treat a severe fungus on the face of a female chimp.

Dr. Goodall is in the United States oo a three-week lecture tour, then it's back to Tanzania and her surviving community of chimps. Why has she done it for 18 years and why will she go on doing it? Because the chimps are still man's closest living relative.

"We've got an abundance of fossils that tell us what early man looked like and how he walked," Dr. Goodali said. "But the only way we can begin to understand early man's behavior is by comparative studies with these chimps. It is only through these chimps that you can begin to understand the evolutionary pro-cesses that molded our behavior as it is today."

PEOPLE: Wayne Leaves Hospital Feeling Wonderful

Actor John Wayne, wearing a wide-hrimmed hat and saying, "I feel great, wonderful," left Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston amid tight security. He underwent open-heart surgery three weeks ago. Wayne, 70, rode in a limousine out of a basement service entrance of the hospital. Guards walked alongside the car. As the few reporters on hand gathered around his car, Wayne rolled down his window and waved and smiled. "Wooderful," he said. "I'm okay and Boston is wonderful." At Lo-gan International Airport, where n privote jet waited to take him to California. Wayne told reporters. "I feel great, I couldn't feel better. I feel like a new man, that's all I know. It's a wonderful feeling." Wayne said be was returning home and feels he has the strength to carry on the life he led before the surgery. Asked if he planned to continue acting, he said, "Yes. We got a new movie we're working on called, 'Beau John.' It's a helluva good story."

Rudolf Hess, once Hitler's chief deputy, who is the sole prisoner in the Spandau prison to West Berlin, has turned 84. Hess was impris-oned in Britain after he parachuted into Scotland in 1941, elaiming that he had come to seek peace. He was convicted by the Nuremberg tribunal of having planned and waged aggressive war and was sentenced to life imprisonment. In 1946 he entered the Spandau prison, which was built to bold 660 prisoners. He has been its only inmate since 1966.

If Hollywood wants Gingar Rogers to make a comeback; it will have to clean up its act. Miss Rogers, 66, fresh from a selfont person al appearance season in London said that she would love to do a movie again, but that the only film roles she is offered these days are "far too risque." She said. "It really upsets me to think film producen have to make their dollars with bad language and sea. Recently, I was language and sex. Recently, I was in a play and I issued an ultimature that I would refuse to take part unless everything remotely risque was taken out...Countless people con-gratulated me and thanked me and said, 'At last we can bring the kids to the show'."

A Los Angeles judge has given a victory to Nan Wood Graham-tister of artist Grant Wood—in her is gal battle with Hustler magazine.
Mrs. Graham—now 78—was the model for the gaunt farm wife, posed with her weather-beaten husband in front of a barn, in her brother's classic work, "American Gothic." Hustler satirized the painting, showing the woman with bare breasts. Mrs. Graham sued for $10 million, and Hustler filed countersuit, charging that she and her attorney were improperly using the courts and news reports to force payment of damages. The
